[TRANSLATED FROM LISBON PAPERS, RECEIVED AT BOSTON.]

☞ Marshal BERESFORD'S Account of the Battle of Albuera.

From Marshal BERESFORD to Lord WELLINGTON.

Albuera, May 18, 1811.

"MY LORD,

"IT is with great satisfaction, that I inform your Excellency, that the allied army assembled in this place, under my command, on the 16th instant, after a most sanguinary battle, has gained a complete victory over that of the enemy, commanded by Marshal Soult; and I hasten to give your Excellency the particulars:—

"In a former despatch, I informed your Excellency of the march of Marshal Soult from Seville, and in consequence, I judged it prudent to raise the siege of Badajoz, and to prepare to give battle to him, with our united forces, from fear, that having two objects in view at the same time, I should fail of success in both of them.—It appears that Marshal Soult made great exertions to assemble a force, which he thought amply sufficient for his object, which was the relief of Badajoz; and for this purpose he drew a large number of troops from the corps of Marshal Victor, [employed in the siege of Cadiz,] and from Gen. Sebastiani; and, I have reason to believe, from the army of the centre, [Madrid.] Having thus completed his preparation, he marched from Seville on the 10th inst. with a body of troops, computed at between 15 and 20,000 men; and on his entering Estremadura, was joined by the corps of Gen. Daton Maubourg, estimated at 5000 men.—His Excellency General Blake, no sooner heard of this movement of Marshal Soult, than, agreeably to the plan proposed by your Excellency, he marched to form a junction with the corps under my command, and arrived at Valverde the 13th inst.—Having consulted with Gen. Castanos, it was resolved to meet the enemy, and give him battle.

"Knowing the determination of the enemy to relieve Badajoz, I marched from before that place with the infantry to the post opposite Valverde, (excepting the division of Major-General Cole, who I left with 2000 Spanish troops to cover the retreat of our besieging stores.)

"The cavalry, which, agreeably to my orders, retired, as the enemy advanced, joined, in St. Martha, the cavalry of Gen. Blake; the cavalry of Gen. Castanos, commanded by Count Perre Villemur, acting with ours.

"As being posted at Valverde would leave Badajoz entirely open, I determined to take a position, (the best that could be found, in an open country) in this place; fixing it exactly between the enemy, and Badajoz:—The army was consequently assembled here, on the 15th inst. The corps of Gen. Blake only effected a junction with us on that night, notwithstanding it had made a forced march; and it could not be posted in its position until the morning of the 16th, when we were also joined by the division of Gen. Cole, and a Spanish brigade under Don Carlos d'Espana, and this but a little while before the battle.—Our cavalry found itself obliged, on the morning of the 15th, to retire from St. Martha, and march to this place.

"On the morning of that 15th day, the enemy appeared in our front.—On the following morning, preparations were made to receive them:—Being formed in two lines, almost parallel to the river Albuera, on the summit of the elevation rising from the river, and covering the roads to Badajoz and Valverde. I presume your Excellency knows, that this country is impassable for large bodies. The corps of Gen. Blake was on the right, in two lines;—His left on the road of Valverde; joined to the right of the division under Gen. Stewart;—His left of Gen. Stewart's Brigade, which he [illegible] Gen. Cole; [illegible] Gen. Cole was [illegible] Gen. Hamilton; [illegible] Brigade. [illegible] Gen. Lumley's cavalry [illegible] Albuera, a considerable distance [illegible] our right. This cavalry was supported [illegible] woods opposite to a great body [illegible] upon our [illegible] of Albuera;—During [illegible] to defile and [illegible] our right [illegible] back;—Another [illegible] Lieutenant Colonel [illegible] form a part of his first line, and all his second, as a front to the oblique line, which he executed.

"The enemy began the attack at nine o'clock—not refraining, at the same time, to threaten our left;—and, after a vigorous and brave resistance, of the Spanish troops, the enemy regained the heights upon which these troops were formed. In the mean time, the division of Gen. Stewart advanced to sustain them, and that of Gen. Hamilton for the left of the Spanish line; and formed in solid columns, near the battalions, in order that they might be able to move in all directions.

"The Portuguese brigade of cavalry, under Brig. Gen. Otway, extended itself a considerable distance on the left, in order to oppose any attempt of the enemy below the village.

"As the height which the enemy had gained, over-looked and entirely commanded our position, I found it necessary to make an effort to retake and hold it;—and a most noble attempt was made, by the division under Gen. Stewart, this brave officer being at its head. Almost from the beginning of the enemy's attack, it began to rain heavily, which, together with the smoke, rendered it impossible to discover any thing distinctly;—and this, with the nature of the ground, proved very favorable to the enemy for forming his lines, and for the subsequent attack. The brigade on the right of Gen. Stewart's division, under Lt. Col. Colburn, began the attack, and behaved with the greatest intrepidity; and finding that the enemy could not be repulsed by the fire of musquetry, he proceeded to attack him with the bayonet, and, while in the act of attacking, a body of Polish-mounted pikemen, who, favoured by the darkness of the atmosphere, and the nature of the ground, had kept itself concealed, (and, besides, through mistake of the brigade it was taken for Spanish cavalry, and consequently not fired upon); turned upon the brigade, which finding itself unexpectedly attacked in its rear, was unfortunately broken, and suffered greatly. The 31st regiment, forming on the left of the bridge, escaped this charge; and, under the direction of Major L'Estrange, maintained its ground until it arrived at the 3d brigade, under Major-Gen. Houghton:—The conduct of this brigade was remarkably courageous; and that of the 2d brigade, under Lieut. Col. Abercrombie, was not less distinguished.

"Major-Gen. Houghton, while animating his brigade to a charge, fell, pierced with wounds. While the attack of the enemy was principally directed to this point, on our right, he also made continual attempts upon that part of our front before the village and bridge, which were valiantly defended by Major-Gen. Baron Alten, and the brigade of light-infantry of the German Legion, whose conduct was evidently, in every respect, extremely good. This brigade actually formed our left; and the division of Major-General Hamilton was sent and left there to direct the defence of the bridge, while the enemy continued its attack on our right. A considerable number of Spanish troops, assisting in the defence of this post, the cavalry of the enemy fell upon its infantry, to endeavour to force our right, and tried to overthrow it; but, by the skilful manœuvres of Major-General H. W. Lumley, commander of the allied cavalry, although greatly inferior to that of the enemy, its designs were frustrated.

"Major-Gen. Cole, perceiving the attack of the enemy, very judiciously pushed his left a little, and marched in a line to attack the left of the enemy, as I arrived very opportunely to contribute, in conjunction with the division of Gen. Stewart, to force the enemy to abandon his post, and retire with precipitation to the protection of a body of reserve. On this occasion the brigade of fusileers particularly distinguished itself. The enemy was pursued by the allies a considerable distance, and as far as I judged it prudent, owing to the enemy's superiority of cavalry; contenting myself with seeing them driven to the river Albuera.

"I have reason to speak, in very favorable terms, of the manner in which our artillery was served, and fought; and Major Hartman, commander of the English artillery, and Major Dickson, commander of the Portuguese, as well as the officers and soldiers, merit the greatest acknowledgments:—The four pieces of the horse artillery, under Capt. Lefebre, did great execution upon the cavalry; and a Spanish brigade of artillery, the only one on the field, behaved with equal bravery.

"We are astonished at the loss sustained by the brigade under the command of Lt. Col. Colburn, of whom Gen. Stewart speaks in the highest terms, which the enemy had time to [illegible] prisoners [illegible] of the [illegible] seeing that this attack had failed, made another attempt.

"The Portuguese division of General Hamilton displayed on every occasion the greatest firmness and courage, and manœuvred quite as well as the English troops. The Portuguese brigade of General Hervey, belonging to the division of General Cole, had an opportunity of distinguishing itself whilst it was marching in a line along the plain, repulsing with fury, a charge of the enemy's cavalry.

[The Marshal then enumerates, at much length, the brave and meritorious actions of the various officers and corps in this memorable battle.—All the army did its duty.]

"Inasmuch as we cannot know with certainty the loss of the enemy, it must be so much greater:—He left about 2000 dead on the field of battle; and we made between 900 and 1000 prisoners.—He had five Generals killed and wounded; of the first were the Generals of Division Merley and Pefim; Gazom and two others of the latter. The enemy's force was a great deal more considerable than our information stated at the beginning;—for the force which retreated could not be computed at less than 20 or 22,000 foot, and most assuredly 4000 horse; besides a numerous and heavy artillery. It was the number of this artillery which gave a check to all our operations;—and with his artillery he saved his infantry after his retreat. He retired, after the battle, to the ground he before occupied, as a defensive post; and this movement of his her during the night, he began his retreat by the same road through which he came, to Seville; and abandoned Badajoz to its fate:—He left a number of wounded at the place from which he retired—to whom we have given all the assistance in our power. I ordered our cavalry to pursue the enemy; but it is so powerful in this species of force, that we could not attempt any thing in the plains over which he is passing.

"Thus we have reaped the advantages which we expected, in opposing the attempts of the enemy;—and the enemy has been obliged to abandon the object for which he drained Andalusia of troops, instead of fulfilling the magnificent promises with which Marshal Soult flattered his troops at their departure from Seville:—He is upon his return, after having his army defeated; and perhaps, what he will think of more consequence, with his reputation diminished.

[☞ Offer the usual thanks to his staff, and recommendations of them to favor, the Marshal concludes.]

"I have the honor to be, &c.

"C. W. BERESFORD.

"Marshal and Lt. General.

"P. S. The division of Maj. Gen. Hamilton, and the brigade of Maj. Gen. Madden, of the Portuguese cavalry, marched this morning, in order to invest Badajoz, on the South side of the Guadiana."

[☞ The return of Marshal B. states the grand total loss of the allied army at 4158 men, and 97 horses, killed, wounded, and missing.]

COLUMBIA.

WASHINGTON CITY, JULY 2.

THE frigate Essex, Capt. Smith, has at length arrived in this country, having on board WILLIAM PINKNEY, Esq. our late Minister to Great-Britain, after a passage of 49 days.

On the same day, a few hours before the Essex, arrived at Annapolis the British frigate Minerva, Capt. Hawkins, of 32 guns, having on board AUGUSTUS J. FOSTER, Esq. the British Minister to our government. The Minerva sailed from England six or seven days before the Essex.

Mr. PINKNEY arrived in this city on Sunday from Annapolis. Mr. FOSTER arrived in this city the same day, together with his suite.

At length the "Intelligencer" announces, that "by the Essex despatches are received from France;" BUT "the contents of which rumor has not wafted to our ears."

It is rumoured, that Mr. Russell, our charge d'affaires in Paris, is about to return home incognito, and we stated that Mr. Barlow, who enjoys the salary of Minister to France, is said [illegible] in the family [illegible] with Mr. Serrurier.

July 4.

On Tuesday last, Augustus J. Foster, Esq. was presented by the Secretary of State to the President of the United States, and exhibited his credentials as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Great-Britain to the United States.

Mr. Monroe was also presented, as Secretary of [illegible] and Mr. Baker as [illegible] to the Legation.

Sir Geoffrey Tempest came over from England in company with Mr. Foster.

NEW-YORK, [illegible] 9.

Letters from Washington state, that the President's proclamation convening Congress on the first Monday of November next, will appear in a few days—and that the President will be [illegible] to Congress, the extension of the Non-Intercourse law to France.

Impressment.—The friends of Gideon Caprior, who was not long since impressed on board his Majesty's ship Gurrier, have favored us with the sight of the copy of a letter from Col Barclay, addressed to Admiral Sawyer, and a copy of the Admiral's answer; the latter of which they have obligingly permitted us to transcribe, and to present to the American public, for the purpose of placing in a true and fair light, the manner in which such impressments are regarded, and treated by the proper authority.

HALIFAX, June 25, 1811.

SIR,

I had the honor to receive your letter, dated the 20th ult. relative to the persons named in the margin, [John Digio, Gideon Caprian, Josh. Leeds,] on my arrival at Halifax, the 19th inst. which had been previously opened by Capt. Pechell, of his Majesty's ship Guerriere, the senior officer, who immediately discharged John Digio, in compliance with your request.* He would have given up Gideon Caprian also, had he not entered into his Majesty's service, and wished to remain; from which circumstance, he conceived it to be his duty to detain him for my decision respecting him. But having received your letter, expressing his father's request to have him sent home, I have now sent him to New-York, by the Prince Earnest Packet, and will order the discharge of Josh Leeds, on the arrival of his Majesty's ship Eurydice, if he is, (as I suppose,) on board her.

I assure you, sir, I shall be happy to receive any representations you may be pleased to make to me, with all the deference to which they will be entitled, as I perfectly coincide with you, that when American citizens are impressed, by mistake or otherwise, they should be immediately released.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most Obd Humbl. servant,
H. SAWYER, Rear-Admiral.

THOMAS BARCLAY, Esq.

* I must here, in justice to Capt. Pechell, of his Majesty's ship Guerriere, assure you, that he never was six leagues, so near the American coast as has been represented.

The democratic papers are publishing an account of the impressment of one James Harvey, who said he was born in Rhode-Island, was impressed and ran away at Cadiz. On this affair this morning's Baltimore paper contains the following paragraph:

"The seaman (James Harvey) whose letter was pompously published by the Collector of this port in the American, complaining of his having been impressed, though a native of the U. S. and whose case was afterwards given with many circumstances calculated to claim an uncommon share of sympathy, is now here. We are assured that he is a British subject, and that his tongue is an infallible proof that he is not, as pretended, a native of the United States."

BOSTON, JULY 10.

PENINSULAR WAR.

Some time must elapse before we may expect any additional interesting intelligence from Portugal. The Prince of braggadocios, Massena, and every mother's son of his "110,000 invincibles," (24,000 of whom the Moniteur declared to be equal to 40,000 English leopards) having been driven headlong out of that kingdom; and his Highness, accompanied by Marshal Junot and General Loison, two of his ablest Lieutenants, having set off post haste for Paris: where Marshal Ney had gone before him; the conquest of Portugal, must have been adjourned without day; and the pleasure of drowning Lord Wellington and his host in the Tagus, have been postponed to a more convenient opportunity. At the last dates fresh reinforcements from England were landing in Lisbon for the allied army;—of them were two regiments of cavalry.

FROM SPAIN

We may expect still further information of interest.—The nicknamed King, Joseph, had left the kingdom;—the Patriot arms had been peculiarly successful in Catalonia;—Marhal Soult, with all the force he could collect, after a bloody conflict, had been frustrated in his design to relieve Badajoz. These are all events of importance; in addition to which we learn yesterday, that when the Pallas, which has arrived at New-York, from Cadiz, left that city (May [illegible]) it was reported that the besiegers were spiking their cannon, preparatory to raising the siege. Soult was continuing his retreat towards Seville; and at the last date had reached St. Olalla, about half way between Albuera and Seville.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE.

The last advices from Russia are of a more decisive type than any before received. Letters from intelligent persons in Petersburgh, dated as late as the [illegible] April, speak confidently that War with France was considered inevitable;—that the Emperor Alexander had positively refused to accede to the Continental system, and has a force of [illegible] thousand assembled in Poland; and it was believed in the North that but for the precarious state of the war in the peninsula, Bonaparte would ere since have declared war against Russia. We have grounds for believing that accounts to the above effect have been received by the administration from Mr. Adams, and also, that Mr. Russell, our charge d'affaires in Paris, has communicated similar tidings.

Newport,

SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1811.

From PAINE'S AURORA, of July 8.

As to France it is now very evident that we have nothing to expect from that quarter, and that all the property of our citizens shipped to the European continent under a dependence in the good faith of our own government, is now illusory, that all that has been sequestered is lost to the owners.

Unquestionably the time is past when we could have expected a liberal policy from France, and that we are not more deeply involved is not due to any wisdom in our recent councils, any more than forbearance in the ruler of that nation; we owe our security to the "mass of waters," as Mr. Jefferson observes in his letter to Lord Buchan, "which separates us from Europe."

With regard to the continent of Europe, there is no freedom of trade nor safety in it, but accompanied by a humiliation which we have earned, and which has been so deservedly retaliated upon us

As to our commerce in the North of Europe, those who calculate upon it should insure upon ruin. There is no safety, no remuneration to meet the risks—they may as soon expect returns from the Vortex of Hecla.

If Congress are called, what can they do—the leaven that leavened the lump is still part of the lump. The men must be born again, or new men with abler heads and better hearts must take their places.

Notwithstanding it has been recently said from a very high authority, [Gov. Gerry] that we should have no home market, however well calculated that notion may be to sooth political partizans, no assertion was ever made more untrue.

4th of July 1811.

The 35th Anniversary of our Independence has been celebrated with greater eclat, than, perhaps, any previous one.

In Boston, the day was commemorated, by the Federal Republicans, with unusual marks of splendor. We notice the following among the toasts drank on the occasion:

By the Hon. Mr. HILLHOUSE, of Con.

The citizens of Boston—May they be restored to a right authorized by the Revolution—the freedom of commerce.

By the Hon. Mr. PICKERING.

The principles of our Independence—We resisted oppression from abroad, and will never submit to tyranny at home.

By the Hon. Mr. LLOYD.

The rightful protectors of the Cause of Liberty—When submission would be treason, may they never fear to meet the charge of Rebellion.

By the Hon Mr. OTIS.

Non-Intercourse—As it was hatched up the back-stairs at midnight, may it be thrown out of the window at noon-day.

By the Hon. DANIEL SARGANT.

The Denounced Assemblage in Boston—Hercules grown to the stature of Man, is certainly not inferior in strength and courage to the same Hercules who strangled the serpents in this cradle.

By Judge DAWES.—The "Rose" who in Faneuil-Hall was not afraid to call his tongue his own.

By Mr. OLIVER.—The Inhabitants of Boston.—Proscribed by Hunt[illegible] and denounced by Gerry. May they be as successful in maintaining the rights of freemen against the one as the [illegible]

ELEGANT EXTRACTS

The following Extracts, are from an excellent Oration delivered at Boston, on the 4th inst. by JAMES [illegible] Esq.

"By the anarchists of France the limit to the revolution was set by the judgment, or conceived by the imagination. Every thing was to be [illegible] to-day, re-changed to-morrow, changed again the third day. The attitude feared quiet as subject to order as tyranny. Like its slaves, they kept up their first by continual draughts of the fiery [illegible] supplied by the leaders of one [illegible] whom they followed over the [illegible] bodies of the leaders of another. Other people would have been [illegible] ed, if not sobered; but they, [illegible] supplying the vacancies of those [illegible] held on for years their mad [illegible] march of madness.

Through many a dark and dreary [illegible]
They pass'd, and many a region [illegible]
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery [illegible]
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, [illegible]
shades of death,
A universe of death.

"The representative power [illegible] Congress were executed w[illegible] regard to their authors, no [illegible] of encroaching on another's right, any more than of surrendering its own.

"In France, the bands of assassins that governed Paris in quick succession, usurping all the powers of the empire, and decreeing havoc and murder in the name of the people, seemed to triumph in their emulation of a democracy of infernals.

"In our revolution every object was definite, every project sober and attainable, every means honest and judicious. The result was happy. Our people obtained every thing that their imaginations could desire, or their virtues deserve.

"Every object of the other revolution was undefined, and undefinable as chaos; every project foolish or impracticable; the means inadequate, outrageous, and bloody. In its course it respected neither the innocence of infancy, the tenderness of woman, nor the feebleness of age. Of its end no human hand can draw, no mortal eye could endure the picture. The pitiless grasp of despotism, to gratify its ferocious ambition, drags the parent from the circle of his children, the husband from the bosom of his wife, the child from the arms of its mother, the lover from the embrace of his mistress. The people have no voice in the prosecution of this war, as endless, as, thank be to God, its purpose is unattainable. They have no rights. The simple virtues, the amenity of manners, the chivalric honour, the activity of enterprize, that characterized France, and of old supported her fame, have all fled. Human forms indeed remain; but their moral desolation resembles the black and blasted forest, that has been swept of its ancient honours by a universal conflagration.

"In the present condition of the world, our independence cannot be preserved without a strict confederation between the states; and the general government must be corrupt or stupid beyond endurance, before the people of a single section will generally believe that any good is to be preserved to them by the sacrifice of union. We cannot however but regret, that the aggregate wealth and power of the United States, affords less protection to our citizens, than might be received from a proper developement and exercise of the resources of a single member of the confederacy. I will not name Massachusetts, lest affection for my native land might be thought to have magnified her capacity, and exaggerated her virtues; but who will not believe, that a judicious administration of a powerful commonwealth, like New-York or Pennsylvania, could better maintain peace at home and dignity abroad; could, by a competent naval force, better vindicate the rights and assert the privileges of commerce, than our national rulers have done for years. The purposes of the union will be respected by all the true friends of union. They are unworthy to govern, who will not defend the community. We have too long paid more, as the forfeit of cowardice, than would have prevented or avenged our injuries.

With nearly four times the population and wealth of Denmark we were, in one year, by that power alone, robbed of thrice as much as our whole expenditure for a navy. In the last ten years our revenue has amounted to one hundred and twenty millions, and a economical administration has built one sloop of war, three or four forts, and uncounted gunboats. Instead of lighting up and cherishing the fire of national honour, the course of our policy has appeared to subdue or extinguish it.—Nothing can tend more to degrade a government than to be wholly occupied in proposing alternatives to foreign nations; and when one is rejected to offer another, and another, until propositions become the only weapon of warfare on one side, and retaliation returns only the alternative of injury or contempt. Who does not feel that we have degenerated from the principles of our independence? that as we have increased in power, we have diminished in spirit? Can we expect to maintain our dignity abroad, before our rulers learn to respect themselves? We have much, very much, to recover, before we regain that sublime height on which our infancy was passed. The emblem of our sovereignty, the eagle of our mountains, attempts in vain his accustomed excursions; some malignant influence hangs on his flight, and confines him to regions that his aspiring wing spurned when he first left his nest. He could once expatiate with unwearied pinions in the fields of heaven, bearing the thunder in his talons, pouncing with vengeance on his adversaries, and soaring with undazzled vision towards the sun;—how is he tamed and dispirited now!

Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak and lightning of his eye.

From the National Intelligencer.

"The following extraordinary publication from the late Secretary of State [Mr. SMITH's Address to the American People] has appeared in the form of a pamphlet, as well as in most of the newspapers in opposition to the Executive, and perhaps in some of a different character. It is now some weeks since it was exultingly announced by federal prints that Mr. Robert Smith was about to publish "an attack on Mr. Madison."

We had flattered ourselves that the conductors of these journals had suffered their hopes of discord to deceive them, and that a regard for his own reputation and feelings, if not for the public good, would have withheld the threatened publication of Mr. Smith.—But the appearance of his address has dissipated hopes so rationally entertained, and given birth to feelings painful in proportion to the regret we feel at being irresistibly impelled, by every consideration of principle, to express sentiments, in relation to its author, very different from those we have been disposed to entertain.—The publication in question is highly reprehensible in a variety of respects, as a shameful breach of official and personal confidence; as an underhand insidious recurrence to circumstances in which he cannot be chastised by contradiction, the facts being known only to the party attacked, whose official station forbids a reply even for the refutation of calumny; as a malignant though feeble attempt to pull down the government and constitution which he was bound by every tie of honor and honesty to support. We here present to our readers the pamphlet complete, and in our next number we shall follow it with some strictures.—In this task we shall however, confine ourselves to a single review of the document itself. We shall pry into no office secrets to test the truth or detect the falsity of any of its statements; we shall not ask from the President any fact within his knowledge; since he certainly would not stoop to impart them for the sake of repelling a pitiful assault on his personal character.—No, we will not even strip the recreant production of this cloak, too scant indeed to hide its deformity. We will take the publication into our closet and dwell only on its inherent character, expose its nefarious principle and notice its glaring absurdities."

[Every reader, we think, may make some profitable comments on the above ABLE specimen of lamentation and scolding.]

On the above the Federal Republican of Baltimore has the following pungent remarks:—

"Well may the unfortunate Mr. Smith, who has heretofore loaded the columns of the National Intelligencer with ranting denunciations of federalists and sophistical representations, to lull patriotism and blind the jealousy of the democratic party, exclaim, et tu Brute! "This is the unkindest cut of all!"—But if Mr. Madison, who according to the admission of Mr. Smith, is accustomed to speak through the Intelligencer, thought proper to vindicate himself in the mode, which might have been anticipated, not by controverting his statements and refuting accusations, which would be the more difficult task, but by commencing a personal attack upon Mr. Smith, the respectful decorum of Mr. Smith' language, at least, might have been reciprocated.—Instead, however, of this, we find a billingsgate style pursued, more suitable for a controversy between Knights of the Pillory than pretended statesmen, who are at this moment vying with each other for the rule of a nation, which would have been great, if such men had never wielded its destinies, and which may yet become so, if, as is probable, the victorious faction shall soon follow that, which it has ruined and disgraced, into the gloom of merited proscription and infamy.

"Covered with the shame of being openly accused in the face of the world by his prime and confidential minister, of a treacherous devotion to the enemy, who has plundered us of two thirds of our commercial capital, who has beggared, murdered and annihilated so much of the civilized world, what shall the guilty, the tottering magistrate of a yet free people devise to continue his snares, or to shelter himself against the indignation, which rises against him in every direction? Shall he contradict his own propensities; shall he fly in the face of attested facts, by feigning a disposition to accommodate with England? We cannot believe, that he retains enough of the shreds of confidence to practice another national deception.—The voice of the People calls for impeachment of the unfaithful Steward and refuses to place further trust in his artful management."

We are informed, that within the last five days, near forty citizens have died suddenly, in consequence of drinking cold water.

N. Y. Morning Post, July 9.

PHILADELPHIA, JULY 8.

We had no less than 12 sudden deaths in this city on Saturday last.—Some of them by drinking cold water, and others by being overcome by the excessive heat only—and yesterday, tho' the heat was considerably abated by an easterly breeze, we are told one or two lost their lives by their inattention in drinking while too warm.

Mr. Pope, a democratic Senator from Kentucky, has published an address to the people of that state, complaining of the treatment he has received from writers of his own party, and justifying his speech in favor of the Bank of the United States.

Died,

At Westerly on the 3d inst. Capt. CHRISTOPHER VARS, formerly of Middletown, (on this Island) in the 29th year of his age.

Artificial Mineral Waters.

Soda and Ballstown Water,
For sale at the Medicine Store of SAMUEL W. VINSON,
No. 93, Thames Street, NEWPORT

AND Manufactured upon correct chemical principles, by R. STARKWEATHER, of Providence; the excellent purity of which, has been long established by the experience of mankind, and confirmed by the opinions of the first medical practitioners of every enlightened country.

SODA WATER.

This pungent and aerated Water has been directed by medical men, and is well known to produce desirable effects in many common and troublesome complaints. It is a complete remedy against fulness of the stomach, commonly called heart burn and in cases of indigestion and weakness of the stomach it is found very useful; gradually restoring the appetite and vigour to the organs; it is a preventative of many of the diseases of the stomach and bowels, which proceed from acidity, and for the same reasons, it in most cases removes or prevents the sick headache; it has proved advantageous in the gout, as those who have taken this water for the gravel have been cured by such diseases by means of soda; it may be taken to the quantity of a pint or more daily, at three stated periods, morning, noon and night, one hour previous, to the several meals of the day.

SODA WATER is also a very refreshing and grateful drink, especially after heat and fatigue, and may be made a complete substitute for the beverages of which ardent spirits form a part.—With wines and sugar it is very grateful.

BALLSTOWN WATER.

The Water sold under this name has been acknowledged by judicious professional men, Chemists and Physicians to be in its effects and properties equal if not superior to the most approved, the virtues of which have often been enumerated by writers, and experienced by the public at large. It is well known in the United States as a gentle cathartic—an active diuretic—a remedy against gravelly complaints—a tonic to the stomach and generally to the system—not to mention its efficacy against rheumatic and cutaneous complaints, when applied externally as well as internally; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the use of it enlivens the spirits, increases the appetite and helps digestion; it is perfectly clear and pebbled and sparkles when poured into the glass. It is highly valuable as possessing great purgency; and is strongly chalybeate; it may be drank in the hottest weather in the largest quantities, without the least injury and at any time of day, an hour before or two hours after meals.

CERTIFICATE

From the evidence we have had of the skill of Mr. STARKWEATHER in preparing his artificial Mineral Waters and from the use we have made of them, we do not hesitate to recommend them to the inhabitants of the town, both as an agreeable beverage and as a mild and useful medicine in the complaints for which the Natural Mineral Waters are often prescribed.

PARDON BOWEN,
LEVI WHEATON.

Providence, May 21 1811.

☞ Tickets: One Dollar each, entitling the bearer to 25 glasses of Mineral Waters, for sale as above; single glass 6 cents; it may also be received in jugs or bottles of any size.

N. B. The addition of a little common wine to the Soda Water gives it all the pungency and sparkling quality of the best Champaign Wine.

NATIONAL ODE.

[☞ The following ODE was sung at the late splendid celebration of Independence at Faneuil-Hall; and produced an animating political effect, which has not been equalled since the proud times of "Adams and Liberty."—In the course of the evening it obtained a currency among the celebrators convened in other parties; and was received with repeated applause.—From the powerful simplicity of its poetical style, the admirable adaptation of the words to an impressive national tune, and the strong plain sense of its political principles, we have no doubt it will become the favourite popular song of the day.]

ODE,

FOR THE FOURTH OF JULY, 1811.

BY ROBERT TREAT PAINE, JUN. ESQ.

TUNE—"BATTLE OF THE NILE"

LET patriot pride our patriot triumph wake!
The Jubilee of Freedom volumes a Nation's soul!
On land, or main, no right of realm forsake.
Tho' warrior storms, like ocean tempests roll
Speed your banners, let Commerce, Industry directing,
Mantle the waves, by courage, Wealth protecting:
And new honors while we pay
To our Country's Natal Day,
Let us build her great renown,
From a soil and sea our own;
For COMMERCE, AGRICULTURE, ART—
Unrivalled shall be!
Huzza! Huzza! Huzza! Huzza!
Huzza! Huzza! Huzza! Huzza!
COLUMBIA [illegible] the Star Spangled Banner.

2.

Arise! Arise! Columbia's Sons, Arise!
Assert the ocean, your Ocean's sovereign law;
No foot shall fly shall hover in your skies!
No pirate keep your mariners in awe.
The [illegible] rights of your shores by Commerce
Law expounded,—
Your waters shall be safe, where
[illegible] are sounded
Of the shoals of Newfoundland,
Let your fleets and boats command,
[illegible] a [illegible] of [illegible] you keep [illegible] the deep,
Your Charter, lawful Charter, is revered by every sea.
Huzza! Huzza! &c. &c. &c.

Equal justice neutral laws proclaim,
Power will presumptuous your sovereignty disgrace;
Among your Stars inscribe a Nation's Name,
Your flag will guard your freedom and your trade.
Base Submission—[illegible] dignity and Pride—
Like a worm [illegible] O.K. will [illegible] should
Have [illegible] made.
The [illegible] be [illegible] Ball,
[illegible]
Shall [illegible] rages,
And [illegible] the pirates
And scorn [illegible] spring to [illegible]
Huzza! Huzza! &c. &c. &c.
